Support for college and career readiness standards

Regardless of the path your students take, strong literacy skills are crucial to their success. Standards require students to develop more rigorous writing skills with a stronger emphasis on the ability to synthesize and summarize informational text, formulate an argument, and respond appropriately to source documents. WriteToLearn® is focused on helping students develop the skills they'll need to achieve college and career readiness.

Writing brings words to life.

Four key ways WriteToLearn supports college and career readiness

Readiness Standards	WriteToLearn Support
Students should write every day across subject areas (e.g., Science and Social Studies) and incorporate technology in their practice.	WriteToLearn was developed to reinforce the importance of writing practice across English/ Language Arts, History, Social Studies, and all Sciences. It engages students throughout the entire cycle of writing, getting feedback, and revising.
Students must read texts of increasing difficulty and use source documents to demonstrate the ability to summarize information.	WriteToLearn includes nearly 1,000 informational texts appropriate for grades 3–12. It supports the development of reading comprehension through summary writing activities.
Students should acquire and grow their academic vocabulary through reading.	WriteToLearn takes students through a series of adaptive vocabulary exercises before they read each passage to help build their word knowledge and content understanding. This practice personalizes students' development of the academic vocabulary that will support them throughout the curriculum while building their reading comprehension and writing skills.
Writing tasks should focus on evidence-based activities and encourage critical thinking.	WriteToLearn includes source documents and features a variety of writing prompts including argumentative, narrative, and expository.

WriteToLearn offers students an engaging and motivational environment for practicing and refining their writing and reading comprehension skills.
